Organizations Preparing for Emergency Needs Summary

FEMA

Why Are CBOs Important?

CBOs are organizations that support communities at the local level during regular day-to-day operations.

- CBOs provide critical services to those disproportionately impacted by disasters.
- When CBOs are unable to sustain operations during an incident, individuals who rely on CBOs are exponentially impacted.
- CBOs should feel empowered to prepare!

The CBO: Part of a Greater Whole

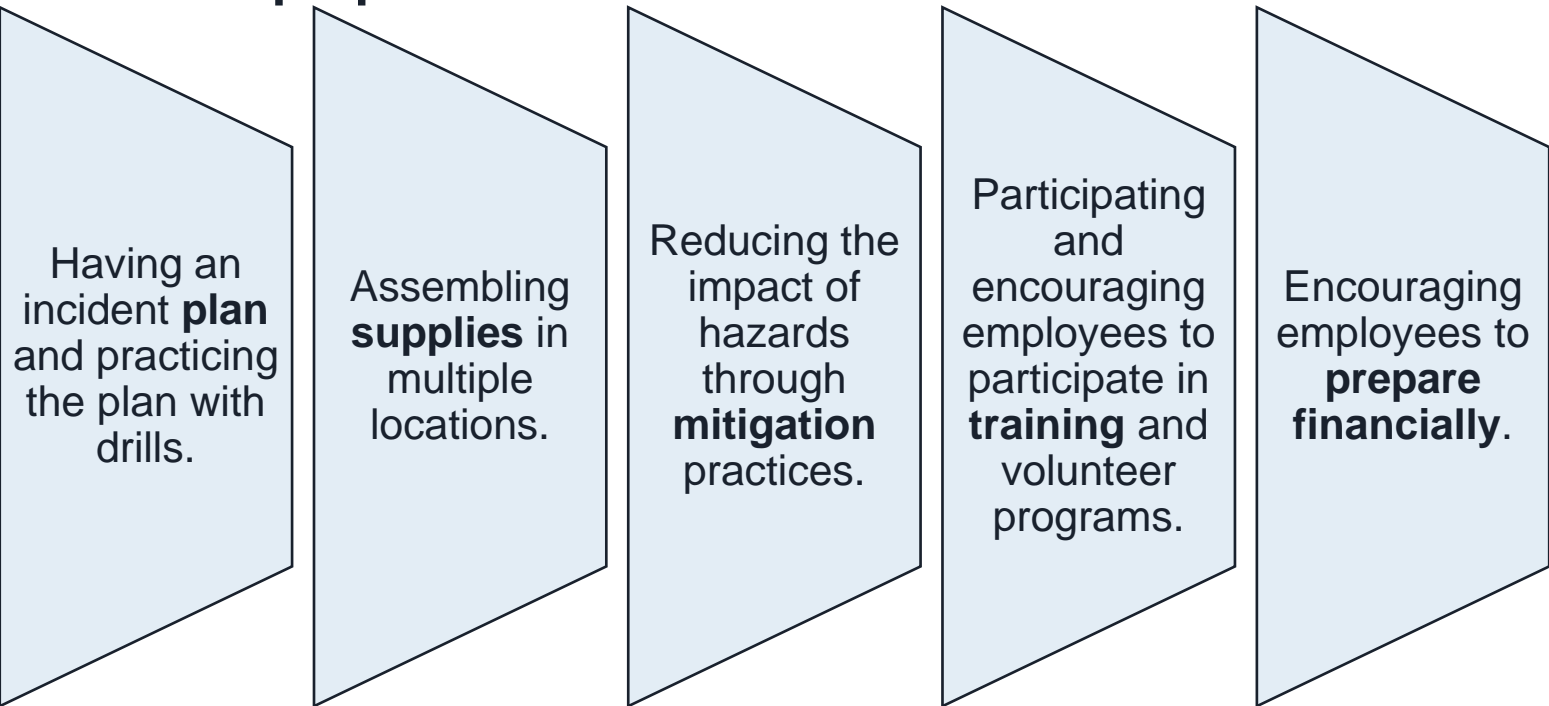

CBOs are interconnected with their community and work closely with families and individuals; they are able to assist during and after incidents in a variety of ways, such as:

- Providing information on the local community to the state and local government, which may assist in shaping response priorities.
- Linking survivors with government resources to assist them in their recovery.

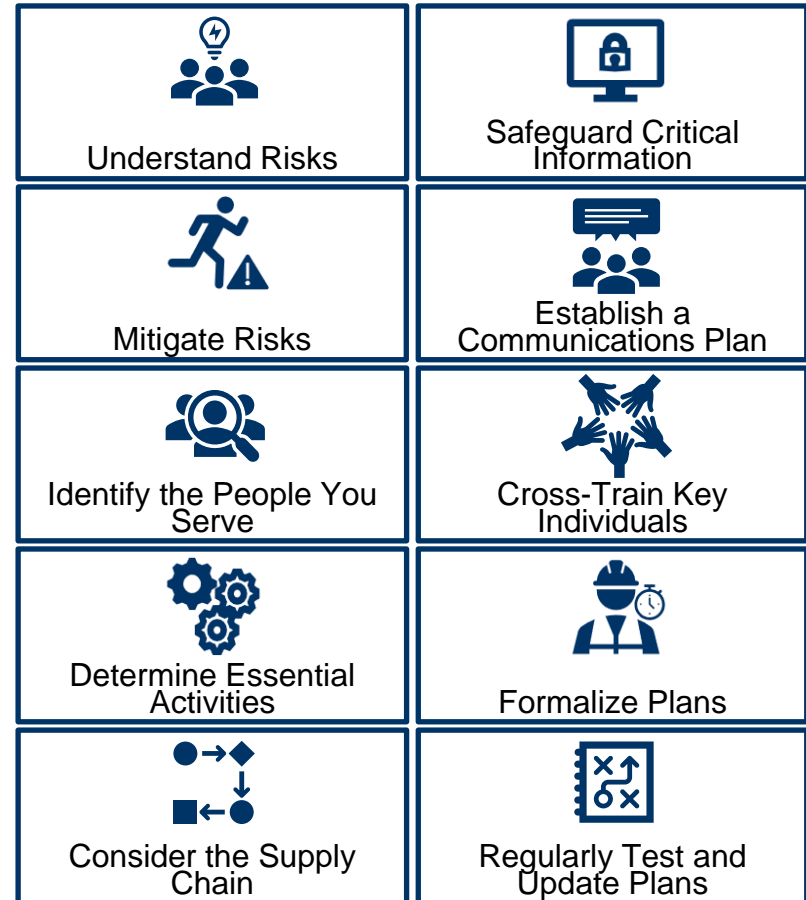

What CBOs Can Do to Prepare

Regardless of the type of hazard, important elements of disaster preparedness for CBOs include:

10 Preparedness Actions

Participants learned these 10 preparedness actions to assist in establishing and bolstering emergency plans.

Help Your Community Prepare!

Community leaders from the private and civic sectors have a responsibility to participate in community preparedness.

- Participate in the local collaborative planning council.
- Identify and integrate appropriate resources into government plans.
- Ensure facilities, staff, and customers or population served are prepared, trained, and practiced in preparedness actions.
